A MESSAGE FROM THE R & D HEAD:

Develop a passion for learning. If you do, you will never cease to grow.”

— Anthony J. D’Angelo

It gives me great pleasure to share a few positive updates from the Research and Development wing. Over the past few weeks, students have shown remarkable dedication in their academic activities and continuous assessments.

As the term progresses, our focus has been on reinforcing conceptual understanding and preparing students for their upcoming examinations through structured revision plans and regular practice sessions. Teachers are working closely with students to identify learning gaps and provide the necessary support through remedial and enrichment programs.

We are pleased to observe steady improvement in academic performance, classroom engagement, and self-discipline among students. Study habits are developing well, and many students are taking active responsibility for their own learning—an encouraging sign of growth.

Our R&D team continues to support the academic departments by analyzing assessment outcomes and suggesting strategies for better learning outcomes. We believe that consistent effort, timely feedback, and parental support will further enhance student achievement.

With regards,

MY FAVORITE HOBBY

My favorite hobby is reading books. I love to read because it helps me learn new things and also improves my imagination. Whenever I have free time, I pick up a book and start reading. My favorite types of books are adventure stories and mystery novels.

Reading also helps me relax after a long day at school. Sometimes, I read books about science and history, which make me curious about the world. I also enjoy discussing the stories with my friends and family.

In the future, I want to read more books from different countries to know about their cultures. Reading is not just a hobby for me; it is a way to explore new ideas and become a better person.
